MacArthur's Assault Groups Seize Marinduque Island

Enemy Attacks Threaten The Saraguenines-Hagenau Road

(By International News Service)

Two American armies on the western front battled today to halt advancing German counter-offensives while other American and British units made meagre gains.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur provided today's war news' cheerful note with the announcement from his Philippine headquarters that American assault troops had seized Marinduque Island, 100 miles southwest of Manila and only 12 miles west of the shores of Luzon in the Sibuyan Sea.

Another blow against the Japanese was struck by the 20th Bomber Command's B-29 Superfortresses. A fleet of the big bombers swept across China to blast industrial targets on Kyushu, southernmost of the Japanese home islands. The War Department's terse announcement of the raid gave no details, but it was presumed the planes hit Omura, one of Japan's aircraft production centers.

On the western front the American Seventh Army battled fiercely to hold sizeable German units which forced the Seventh back from

Rescuers Release Two Men In Boat Caught in Ice-Floe

Two young men, "Bart" McKnight and Warren Hollander, both employees of the Manhattan Soap Company, were the center of interest for a few minutes yesterday afternoon as their row-boat got jammed in the ice-floe on the New Jersey side of the Delaware River. "We were not stuck," they said, when landed on the Penna. side of the stream at the Anchor Yacht Club here. "We were only a short distance from the shore of the island." But to these remarks Chief of Police Linford J. Jones looked askance.

Seeing the boat apparently fast in the ice, those on this side of the stream sent in a call for police. The police, the Bristol Blood Donors Rescue Squad and America Hose, Hook & Ladder Co., No. 2, responded with boat, ropes, poles and hooks. The rescuers launched their boat from the Moose Home dock and soon reached the imperiled pair as the river was free of ice to the other side of the channel.

It didn't require much effort to get McKnight and Hollander free and then they rowed their own boat into shore.

It appears that McKnight owns an airplane which made a forced landing on Burlington Island on Thursday when a cylinder went bad in the motor. The motor was removed from the plane and brought over here for repairs. The two men were returning to the plane with the repaired motor when the ice-floe proved too much for them.

"Washington had to do that, but they didn't," said a spectator standing on the Lafayette street dock.

ALLIED TROOPS UNDER MONTGOMERY TEAR TWO BREACHES IN GERMAN SALIENT

Paris—Allied troops under Field Marshal Sir Bernard L. Montgomery have torn two breaches in the northern flank of the German salient in Belgium, Nazi broadcasts admitted today.

Battlefront dispatches and official information at Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's headquarters confirmed steady advances at a painfully slow pace on both northern and southern sides of the bulge.

British armor was reported to be pushing back the extreme western tip of the salient, while in the Saar area to the south, German forces that plunged 15 miles into French territory after crossing the Rhine on barges apparently were being held, the impetus of their sudden attack halted. Heavy fighting raged throughout the Ardennes, with Allied gains of up to 1,000 yards reported in the north.

At the same time, the U. S. Seventh Army farther south beat back a series of desperate Nazi counter-attacks in which the Germans hoped to relieve the pressure against the Saar Palatinate.

Fighting its way southward toward a junction with the U. S. Third Army to cut off an estimated 50,000 Nazi troops, the First Army fought its way into Odeigne some two and one-half miles south of Grandmeil.

The Americans and British encountered strong Nazi defense lines on the northern flank of the enemy bulge where the Germans had dug in for a last-ditch stand. Despite the Nazi preparations, Allied forces chalked up impressive gains.

The Americans and British, under the command of Field Marshal Bernard Montgomery, wrested territory from the Nazis along the whole of a 25 mile front, according to front reports, and smashed within two and one half miles of the main highway from Laroche to St. Vith. The First Army made gains of almost a mile in its drive southwest of Stavelot to reach the outskirts of Urlierment.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

The Insurance Issue

Washington, Jan. 6.—IT IS not unusual for Congress to override the President, but it is unusual, though by no means unprecedented, for Congress to override the Supreme Court. However, in the overruling of the present court's recent decision in the insurance case, which is expected from the new Congress, certain facts make the scheduled action of very great general interest and importance.

IF THIS develops, it will not be a majority of the court which will be overruled but a minority of four who, finding themselves a majority, were able to overturn the precedents of 75 years, rendering a decision that takes from the states vital controls as well as large revenues and adversely affects the interests of some 70,000,000 citizens. The fundamental issue in this case was whether or not the court would

SINK 27 JAP SHIPS; DAMAGE 68 OTHERS

Pearl Harbor—Pacific Fleet Headquarters today lifted a four-day security black-out to disclose that the American carrier-based air force that hit Formosa and Okinawa Jima, in the heart of the Ryukyu chain, in a two-day strike January 2 and 3, sunk 27 Japanese ships and damaged 68. Adm. Nimitz's communique disclosed that the assault of the American carrier-based planes resulted in 11 enemy planes being destroyed and 229 damaged. "Enemy opposition was ineffective," the Pearl Harbor communique pointed out.

B-29's Attack Kyushu

Washington—China-based B-29 Super-Fortress bombers—estimated by the enemy to total between "70 and 80"—heavily attacked industrial targets today on Kyushu, southernmost of Japan's home islands.

Both the War Department's preliminary communique and a report issued by the Jap Imperial Headquarters failed to mention specific targets struck but it was believed that the raiders had again blasted the big plane producing center of Omura.

The Japs said the western part of the island was raided through heavy layers of clouds and claimed that the damage was slight.

Fire Damages the Bunting Property at Hulmeville

HULMEVILLE, Jan. 6.—Fire damaged the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bunting at their farm on Trenton avenue yesterday at five p. m.

The fire-place is one that had been enclosed, and a pipe from a stove extended to it. It was there that the blaze appeared to center. The fire-place was considerably damaged, and some water and smoke damage caused in the living-room.

William Penn Fire Co. of this borough, and the Langhorne Fire Co., were summoned. Water was pumped from booster tanks.

WHAT OUR BOYS ARE DOING TO WIN THE WAR

A U. S. TROOP CARRIER FORCES BASED, European Theatre of Operations, Jan. 6.—With the mud three feet deep in spots around their airfield, members of this Service Group put forth the old college try in refitting an abandoned German tank to use it as a tractor. The tank, a German UZKW III chassis with a 75 mm. gun mounted on it, is now repaired and invaluable in hauling out beswamped vehicles and aircraft. When it was first found, the tank was in shambles, stripped of all removable parts by avid souvenir hunters.

Sgt. Travis C. Towne, Lombard, Ill., and Technician Fifth Grade William F. Egan, Bristol, Pa., of the group's ordnance company, inspected the tank and declared it repairable if the removed parts could be found. The police of the nearby town went to work and uncovered several parts. The ordnance company supplied the other parts and repaired the tank.

The tank repaired, the ordnance men jumped in for a test run back to their encampment. Everything went smoothly until they turned a road bend and ran flush into a British tank column. The Tommies, momentarily surprised at seeing an enemy tank trundling down the road in back of the lines, paused long enough for several GIs to pour out of the German tank and babble a confusion of explanations. When they finally got the tank back to their camp site, they removed the armor, and then burnt off the German crosses to prevent any such mistakes recurring.

A DARING ENGINEER

A man who made important contributions to American engineering supremacy died the other day in Florida—Corydon T.
Purdy, inventor of the steel skyscraper.
Mr. Purdy was born at Wisconsin Rapids, Wisconsin, in 1859, and graduated at the University of Wisconsin in 1885. He worked as a city engineer for a time, but, in 1889, went to Chi-ago to become a specialist in steel bridge design. The next year he made history by designing the Tacoma building, the first structure to burst the height limits imposed by the use of masonry as he principal bearing material.
This building, which stood until recently, was a center of construction industry interest during the Columbian Exposition at Chi-ago and Mr. Purdy and his partner, Lightner Henderson, were accorded world-wide acclaim for their daring use of steel.

In 1894, Mr. Purdy went to New York to design its first steel skyscraper, the Flatiron building.
The steel skyscraper solved the business district congestion problem in New York and influenced radical changes in the building codes and practices of nearly every large city.
Among the men who were responsible for the vast economic development of this country following the depression of 1893,
Mr. Purdy stood with the foremost. His life was an inspiring example of young men who, regardless of situations or circumstances, boldly strike out to make the most of their talents.

JAPS IN CHINA

General MacArthur's campaign on Mindoro, following his smashing success on Leyte, has achieved more than the recapture of a considerable expanse of territory in the Philippines, and the infliction of another defeat on the Japs. It has eased the critical situation in China.
There is no other explanation for the Japanese moves in China.
After Japanese troops had overrun Kwangsi Province and moved into Kweichow, there were fears that the invaders would soon be in position to knock China out of the war.
The invaders did not follow up this advantage, but withdrew into Kwangsi to escape, battle with Chinese troops which had been reinforced. Had the Japs been able to hold MacArthur's forces on Leyte, making the Philippines secure, there would have been no fear of an Allied invasion of the Asiatic theater, in which the principal war against Japan is expected to be waged.

Japan is not oblivious to the fact that final blows will come from that direction. To make present positions secure is now receiving all their attention.
Meanwhile, Allied forces which had been preparing to meet further Jap advances in China have been given a breathing spell, during which they will be able to perfect their plans in anticipation of the day when they will move against Tokyo from that direction.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

who for years have itched to get their hands on the great insurance companies of the country. Strongly dissenting from this four-member decision were Chief Justice Stone, Justice Jackson and Justice Frankfurter. The Chief Justice in characterizing the Black opinion said:
"Its action in overturning the precedents of 75 years governing a business of such volume and of such wide ramifications cannot fail to unleash a flood of litigation and legislation, raising questions which cannot be answered for years to come, during which a great business and the regulatory officers of every state must be harassed by all the doubts and difficulties inseparable from a realignment of the distribution of power in our Federal system."

IN HIS dissent, Justice Jackson said: "The court's decision will require an extensive overhauling of state legislation relating to taxation and supervision. The whole legal basis will have to be reconsidered. What will be irretrievably lost and what may be salvaged no one now can say, and it will take a generation of litigation to determine." Following the decision, Attorney General Biddle declared he had no intention of taking action against the stricken companies until Congress had full opportunity to amend the law. But this temporary protection is wholly inadequate and the states and the companies now look to Congress to save them from chaos.

AT THE last session the House, by a vote of 283 to 54, did pass a bill exempting insurance companies from both the Sherman and the Clayton acts. But, it was not brought to a vote in the Senate and

ONE reason for feeling that Congress will enact an adequate law is that it is so clearly in the national interests to do so. Another is because the solid weight of the states in this case is pretty overwhelming.
Still another is that behind the proposals will be a very great public sentiment reflected by millions of policyholders whose security is threatened. And, finally, the proposed law would not reverse the Supreme Court. It would merely reverse a radical majority. Actually, it would sustain the position of the more able and respected members of the court and place Congress in line with Supreme Court decisions for the past 75 years. In addition, it would have a salutary tendency to check the trend of the court to reverse its own decisions

Color Can Captivate

Sometimes we modern mothers
think our generation has invented the science and psychology of managing the baby. But the facts prove otherwise. For the color of the baby's face, hair, and eyes is a hereditary trait. It is not something that can be changed by the use of dyes or other artificial means. The color of the baby's face,

How Jurors Women To Learn
Today's Quiet Moment

Rev. Edward Garhart Yeomans
Pastor
Bristol Presbyterian Church

Gracious Father, teach us how to turn our failures into success; to enlarge our limitations; to learn from our mistakes; to learn from our failures; to overcome our temptations; that we may be crowned with success and peace.

Amen.

Color Can Captivate

Sometimes we modern mothers
think our generation has invented the
science and psychology of managing
the baby. But the facts prove otherwise. For the color of the baby's face, hair, and eyes is a hereditary trait. It is not something that can be changed by
the use of dyes or other artificial means. The color of the baby's face, hair, and eyes is a hereditary trait. It is not something that can be changed by the use of dyes or other artificial means.

For doctors know that eye and

something that can be changed by
the use of dyes or other artificial
means.

A DARING ENGINEER

A man who made important contributions to American engineering supremacy died the other day in Florida—Corydon T. Purdy, inventor of the steel skyscraper.

Mr. Purdy was born at Wisconsin Rapids, Wisconsin, in 1859, and graduated at the University of Wisconsin in 1885. He worked as a city engineer for a time, but, in 1889, went to Chicago to become a specialist in steel bridge design. The next year he made history by designing the Tacoma building, the first structure to burst the height limits imposed by the use of masonry as he principal bearing material.

This building, which stood until recently, was a center of construction industry interest during the Columbian Exposition at Chicago and Mr. Purdy and his partner, Lightner Henderson, were accorded world-wide acclaim for their daring use of steel.

In 1894, Mr. Purdy went to New York to design its first steel skyscraper, the Flatiron building. The steel skyscraper solved the business district congestion problem in New York and influenced radical changes in the building codes and practices of nearly every large city.

Among the men who were responsible for the vast economic development of this country, following the depression of 1893, Mr. Purdy stood with the foremost. His life was an inspiring example of young men who, regardless of situations or circumstances, boldly strike out to make the most of their talents.

JAPS IN CHINA

General MacArthur's campaign on Mindoro, following his smashing success on Leyte, has achieved more than the recapture of a considerable expanse of territory in the Philippines, and the infliction of another defeat on the Japs. It has eased the critical situation in China.

There is no other explanation for Japanese moves in China. After Japanese troops had overrun Kwangsi Province and moved into Kweichow, there were fears that the invaders would soon be in position to knock China out of the war.

The invaders did not follow this advantage, but withdrew into Kwangsi to escape battle with Chinese troops which had been reinforced. Had the Japs been able to hold MacArthur's forces on Leyte, making the Philippines secure, there would have been no fear of an Allied invasion of the Asiatic theater, in which the principal war against Japan is expected to be waged.

Japan is not oblivious to the fact that final blows will come from that direction. To make present positions secure is now receiving all their attention. Meanwhile, Allied forces which had been preparing to meet further Jap advances in China have been given a breathing spell, during which they will be able to perfect their plans in anticipation of the day when they will move against Tokyo from that direction.

SYNOPSIS

When Drue Cable learned her former husband, Craig Brent, was the victim of a so-called accidental bullet, she persuaded her friend and fellow nurse, Sarah Keate, to answer with her the call made by Dr. Claud Chivory from a small New England town. Sarah was unaware of Drue's previous connection with the Brent family which included Craig's father, Conrad; Alexia, Conrad's glamorous young wife who, at one time, had hoped to marry Craig; Nicky Senour, Alexia's twin brother; and Peter Huber, a friend of Craig. Anna Haub, maid at the Brent mansion, told how Craig was found in the garden the previous night, adding, "Beevens, the butler, said it was an accident—Mr. Craig was cleaning a gun." Alexia ordered Drue to leave before Conrad Brent discovered her presence. Drue told Sarah the strange story of her romance with Craig. They married more than a year ago and Conrad Brent disapproved. Craig's work in the diplomatic service summed him to Washington, and Drue returned to New York. Shortly after, she received a letter from Conrad (which he claimed Craig asked him to write) stating his son had resigned to enter aviation training, only to discover married men were ineligible. Conrad said Craig wished Drue to divorce him, but promised they could remarry when the training period was over. Drue got the divorce but never received any reply to the letters she wrote Craig. Now, she is determined not to leave until Craig regains consciousness and can talk with her. Dr. Chivory told the state trooper that the bullet he removed from Craig's shoulder was accidentally thrown away; the gun, too, is missing. He warned Sarah not to repeat anything the patient might say in delirium. Later, Craig mumbled something about "yellow gloves." From the window, Sarah saw Drue disappear behind a hedge in the garden and emerge soon with something which she hid beneath her cape. A few minutes later Drue entered the sick room just as Craig cried out, "But that's murder! Tell Claud. There'll be murder done." Drue attempted to question him but he lapsed into drugged sleep again. Sarah is summoned by Conrad Brent and follows Beevens into the library, as Maud Chivory, the doctor's wife, is leaving. Sarah is telling the story.

CHAPTER TEN

My first feeling was a wave of sheer self-astonishment that I had had the enormous temerity to call him, flippantly to Drue, Papa Brent. My second was another kind of shock; for I found myself instantly, yes and seriously, on guard. Against what I didn't know, unless it was the quality of incalculability in the man who stood there on the hearth-rug watching me.

I did know then, too, that Drue Cable's position (or rather lack of position) in that household was not in any possible sense due to a mere misunderstanding between lovers that a word or two might have cleared up. It was nothing so trivial. I also thought (queerly, unexpectedly) that there was danger somewhere in that house.

Naturally, one may say that where guns go off and shoot people there must be danger, and it doesn't take any sixth sense to realize it. But it was more than that. It was something else entirely; something that had nothing to do with reason. In fact, it didn't seem to have anything to do with me; it was just an intangible thing that hovered in the very air of that room. The queer part of it, of course, was that it should be intelligible to me. I am never prescient; I have a good stomach, no nerves and little imagination.

Beevens closed the door behind me, and Conrad Brent said, "My wife tells me that the nurse who accompanied you here is a woman who was once my son's wife. I am sending her away at once. I expect you to care for my son yourself until I can make other arrangements." He paused then, and added, "Mrs. Chivory will help you if you need her."

He stood on the hearth-rug waiting for me to say, "yes, sir" (and, unless I was wrong, a little afraid I wouldn't). He was not a tall man, but he was rather muscular and thick; he had a brown face, a sharply aquiline nose and a bearded chin. His eyes were heavily lidded and rather bright in color. He was a little bald; he wore, besides the somewhat stringy beard, a short gray moustache with two sharply waxed points at either side.

Just above him on the breast of the mantle was a coat of arms, carved and painted in somber, rich colors; it was an animal, an obese and unidentifiable creature which may have been a unicorn, standing sportively on one leg on a bit of green. The coat of arms was not quartered, which was unusual and showed me how old the direct line must be. It might have showed me too, but I didn't think of it then, the deliberate casting away of all the hundreds of intermingling and intertwining blood streams in order to cling with absurd stubbornness and self-delusion to one chosen ancestral line.

I didn't consciously think of anything however but Drue. I said, so emphatically that my voice rang out against the dark woods and books and red leather of that study, rather more loudly than I intended, "I'm afraid Miss Cable will have to stay."

"I beg your pardon," he said, although he couldn't have helped hearing me.

"I made it clearer but lower in tone. You can't send Miss Cable away. She is here as a nurse. We are both needed."

"We can get another nurse from New York by morning. Tell her to be ready to leave in half an hour."

I suppose he was not often defied, so, whether his arrogance was assumed or real, obviously it worked. He just didn't believe my own opposition. So I took a long breath and walked up nearer him. "Look here," I said, "do you want your son to die?"

That touched him. Something flinched and moved back of his bright eyes and one hand reached out toward the tall back of a chair near him. He said, "He's not going to die," and looked at me as if darning me to deny it, but it had frightened him all the same.

"Twenty-four hours—thirty-six at the most will tell the tale. If things go well, there's not much for us to do, only routine. If things go wrong, that's different. I'd advise you to let her stay. Besides, he knows she's here." That told him what I said it again in the flash, away back in his eyes.

"I thought he was unconscious. Chivory told me he would be unconscious for some time."

"He's a little," said a few words and then went back to sleep. "Said . . ." he began quickly, checked himself, and then resumed in a more deliberate way. "What did he say?"

"Sorry," I answered. "I'm a nurse. Dr. Chivory reminded me of my oath. Florence Nightingale, you know." I said gently, and watched the purple come up into his cheeks and lips. Too much purple, in fact, in his lips. I couldn't help making a mental note of it.

"Florence Nightingale blazes!" he snapped. "I'm saying yes, I'm his father. What did he say?"

He glared at me and I looked back at him, murmuring, "Sorry, but that's all!" and made a motion toward the door.

"Wait a minute," he said abruptly when I touched the doorknob. There was a short pause. Somewhere a clock was ticking in a measured way. It was almost dark by then but heavy red curtains had been drawn over the windows and one or two table lamps had been lighted. A candle coil fire was burning in the hearth below the coat of arms; a lump cracked open and sputtered; blue sparks shot upward as Conrad Brent asked, "Did he say anything about the accident?" and lifted his light eyes to watch me.

Well, there he had me. In spite of the antagonism Conrad Brent had instantly roused in me, it was clearly my duty to tell someone in authority of the thing Craig had said. So I did.

"He said, well, as a matter of fact, he said this: 'But that's murder. Tell Claud.' And then he said, 'There'll be murder done.'"

I watched Conrad Brent, and he looked back at me without the slightest change of expression. That was rather odd because he ought to have been a little startled. He ought to have questioned me too; but he didn't. After a long moment he only shrugged, "Delirium. Obviously."

And Conrad Brent added, "And he did recognize the woman?"

I discovered a streak of sadism in my nature and said archly, "Oh, definitely!"

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

who, for years have latched to get their hands on the great insurance companies of the country. Strongly dissenting from this four-member decision were Chief Justice Stone, Justice Jackson and Justice Frankfurter. The Chief Justice in characterizing the Black opinion said: "His action in overturning the precedents of 75 years governing a business of such volume and of such wide ramifications cannot fail to unloose a flood of litigation and legislation, raising questions which cannot be answered for years to come, during which a great business and the regulatory officers of every state must be harassed by all the doubts and difficulties inseparable from a realignment of the distribution of power in our Federal system."

IN HIS dissent, Justice Jackson said: "The court's decision will require an extensive overhauling of state legislation relating to taxation and supervision. The whole legal basis will have to be reconsidered. What will be irretrievably lost and what may be salvaged no one now can say, and it will take a generation of litigation to determine." Following the decision, Attorney General Biddle declared he had no intention of taking action against the stricken companies until Congress had full opportunity to amend the law. But this temporary protection is wholly inadequate and the states and the companies now look to Congress to save them from chaos.

AT THE last session the House, by a vote of 283 to 54, did pass a bill exempting insurance companies from both the Sherman and the Clayton acts. But, it was not brought to a vote in the Senate and died when the session ended. Now, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners representing all the states has submitted a legislative program which it is believed will have slight opposition except from the extreme radicals who look upon insurance companies as evil and greedy oppressors of the poor, and from the demagogues who train with them.

ONE reason for feeling that Congress will enact an adequate law is that it is so clearly in the national interests to do so. Another is because the solid weight of the states in this case is pretty overwhelming. Still another is that behind the proposals will be a very great public sentiment reflected by millions of policyholders whose security is threatened. And, finally, the proposed law would not reverse the Supreme Court. It would merely reverse a radical majority. Actually, it would sustain the position of the more able and respected members of the court and place Congress in line with Supreme Court decisions for the past 75 years. In addition, it would have a salutary tendency to check the trend of the court to reverse its own decisions.

Concerning the former practice, Justice Roberts in another case said: "The reason for my concern is that the instant decision, overruling that of nine years ago, tends to bring the adjudications of this tribunal into the same class as a restricted railroad ticket, good for this day and train only."

Gracious Father, teach us how to turn our failures into success; to enlarge our limitations that they might become challenging opportunities; to overcome our temptations that we might experience victory. Keep us from all complaining and self-pity. When our hearts are heavy, give us a sense of Thine abiding Presence. When our task is hard, give us the strength we need to do our best. May our efforts and our hopes be crowned with success as we put our trust in Thee and receive from Thee Thy blessing, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Color Can Captivate

Sometimes we modern mothers think our generation invented the art of baby care—particularly the science and psychology of managing our small fry. All mothers in generations passed, we frequently assume, brought up their young, single-handed, by the if-at-first-you-don't-succeed system. Doctors and the science of pediatrics we regard as a blessing of the present.

But the facts prove otherwise. For instance, here is a bit of book lore on the psychology of baby care, you'd swear came from a specialist today: "In his waking time put him in the light that he may see the stars and sky. And show him sometimes various colors, that you may accustom him to the use of his eyes."

This profound grasp of the importance of eye appeal did not come from a medical man today. It was written on a parchment scroll a thousand years ago by a famous Arabian physician, Avicenna was his name, and he practiced medicine and counseled mothers in the palace of the sultan.

A curious thing about this ancient statement is that doctors are advising the same kind of thing today. In fact one of the many reasons why doctors suggest introducing strained foods early to young babies is because of their beautiful brilliant colors.

For doctors know that eye and appetite appeal are intimately related. And they know that the really garden-fresh colors of all the prepared strained foods do have a wonderful effect on babies' early eating habits. Because they are the natural kinds of colors that always catch a baby's eye.

Strained carrots, for instance, are the tawny tone of a perfectly ripened carrot dug fresh from the soft brown earth. Strained tomatoes are the clear, vigorous red of a sun-ripe tomato hanging heavy on the vine. Strained spinach is a deep rich garden green. And so it goes.

There are no halfway measures about these colors. And there's nothing halfway in baby's reaction to them either. Introduce them one by one. Point out how pretty and bright they are. Then offer him a taste-test sip. You'll find color has a lot to do with baby's acceptance of all foods. And the clear, naturalness of the ready-to-serve strained foods will have such special appeal, he'll take to everyone with gustatory glee.

Bonds Over America

OHIO'S OLDEST BUILDING

Marietta and the Ohio Land Company building, oldest structure in the state, link France and America and both nations' love of liberty. When the first settlers arrived on the shore of the Muskingum River from New England in 1788, they named the settlement in honor of Queen Marie Antoinette whose soldiers had fought and died gallantly to win freedom for this Nation in the Revolutionary War. The city is still small but its tradition inspires Ohio men on all fronts to invest in War Bonds until it is assured by victory.

U. S. COAST GUARD GIVES ARROWS A 58-41 SETBACK ON LOCAL COURT; NIP-AND-TUCK DURING FIRST HALF

Presenting one of the smoothest working combinations to be seen on the local court this season, the U. S. Coast Guard aggregation gave Fleetwings a 58-41 setback, last night on the high school floor. It marked the second time this season that the Guardsmen have stopped the Arrows.

Despite the 17 points difference, the game was more closely played than the score indicates, as it wasn't until the final quarter of the tilt that the members of the armed forces began to build up their large lead.

In fact, throughout most of the first half it was a nip-and-tuck affair. Fleetwings at one time held an 11-9 lead when Vaffis scored a beautiful side shot but this was erased when Tanana dropped in a pair of fouls to even the score. McEngoe gave the visitors a lead with a long goal, but Ace Abbott again deadlocked the score at 13-13 with a set shot.

Tanana scored under the net for the Coast Guard team to give them a two-point lead and then "Woody" Smith stepped into the picture and shook the cords twice for double-deckers to help the Guardsmen take a 22-16 half-time lead. This was increased to 26-16 early in the third period but Abbott and Vaffis shaved the edge to 26-26. When Tanana tapped in a field goal after missing a set-shot, the Guardsmen took a lead which they built up as the game progressed.

Testifies That Tullytown Bridge Should Be Razed

09135, Fallington Road at Falls Township, Bucks County.

The hearing was held by the Public Utility Commission with Examiner Herman Lieberman presiding. Cooner appeared as chief witness for the highways department, submitting to examination by the Department's senior counsel, Thomas C. Evans.

Cooner declared that "there is immediate need for a bridge of heavier capacity, especially with the predominance of war industries in the area." He pointed out that the bridge which would be abolished is "inadequate" for modern traffic, having a four-ton weight limit.

The only opposition voiced at the hearing was made by Fred Watts, representing the King Farms of Morrisville. Watts, although in favor of the improvement, opposed abolition of the bridge, on grounds that it could still be used by four-ton vehicles.

Cooner declared, however, that "if the new road is built and the present bridge left open, we would have no assurance that people using more than four tons would not cross the bridge. He pointed out that the four-ton limit was being consistently violated.

Cooner warned that "a collapse might happen at any time, and one in front of a troop train or a passenger train might have very dangerous results."

He also explained that it would cost approximately $578,000 to replace the bridge with a modern structure, and the construction would entail use of critical material.

He said that the bridge at the Fallington Road had a 24-foot roadway and six-foot sidewalk, and was of concrete and steel construction, and "because of its better width and design we feel it highly desirable to convert traffic to it from route 150 and the old bridge."

He disclosed that plans called for the ultimate construction of a four-lane divided highway with a four-foot divider between two 24-foot lanes, as a roadway from the point where the old crossing would be demolished to the more modern bridge. This road would be a link in a proposed super highway which will by-pass through traffic around Bristol.

The cost to the Highways Department, he estimated, would be approximately $261,000. The Pennsylvania Railroad, also represented at the hearing, estimated that the cost it would entail would be $32,000, plus a $40,000 contribution to the Highways Department for construction. The railroad agreed to remove the bridge and erect barricades.

Cooner said the Department would attempt to secure Federal aid for the project under the law of 1936 providing for appropriation of funds to eliminate dangerous railroad crossings.

Approximately $15,600 in land damage exclusive of that owned by the railroad will be paid by the company, it was brought out. Cooner said that "we propose to start this work at the earliest date we can get approval by the War Production Board. I think we will get approval because of the urgency of Shutting out their opponents in the third quarter, the Fleetwings girls won over the Rohm & Haas sextette in a Trenton Playground League game played on the Junior No. 4 floor in Trenton. Final score was: Fleetwings, 24; Rohm & Haas, 15.

The Rohm & Haas girls took the lead in the opening session by scoring nine points and holding the Wingers to five. They broke even in the second quarter with both teams counting four tallies. But the Fleetwings scored six points in the third quarter while their guards tightened their defense and blanked the chemical mixers.

With Betty Duffy leading the attack, the airplane workers increased this lead in the final eight minutes while the Rohm & Haas team was held to a lone two points. Duffy scored 18 of the winner's 24 points, while Ruth Bachofer's eight points made her the leading scorer for the losers.

AMERICAN ARMIES BATTLE TO HALT ADVANCE OF THE NAZIS IN COUNTER-OFFENSIVES; OTHER AMERICAN AND BRITISH UNITS MAKE GAINS WHICH ARE REPORTED MEAGRE

MacArthur's Assault Groups Seize Marinduque Island

Enemy Attacks Threaten The Saraguemines- Hagenau Road

(By International News Service)

Two American armies on the western front battled today to halt advancing German counter-offensives while other American and British units made meagre gains.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur provided today's war news' cheerful note with the announcement from his Philippine headquarters that American assault troops had seized Marinduque Island, 100 miles southwest of Manila and only 12 miles west of the shores of Luzon in the Sibuyan Sea.

Another blow against the Japanese was struck by the 20th Bomber Command's B-29 Superfortresses. A fleet of the big bombers swept across China to blast industrial targets on Kyushu, southernmost of the Japanese home islands. The War Department's terse announcement of the raid gave no details, but it was presumed the planes hit Omura, one of Japan's aircraft production centers.

On the western front the American Seventh Army battled fiercely to hold sizeable German units which forced the Seventh back from

Rescuers Release Two Men In Boat Caught in Ice-Floe

Two young men, "Bart" McKnight and Warren Hollander, both employees of the Manhattan Soap Company, were the center of interest for a few minutes yesterday afternoon as their row-boat got jammed in the ice-floe on the New Jersey side of the Delaware River. "We were not stuck," they said, when landed on the Penna. side of the stream at the Anchor Yacht Club here. "We were only a short distance from the shore of the island." But to these remarks Chief of Police Linford J. Jones looked askance.

Seeing the boat apparently stuck in the ice, those on this side of the stream sent in a call for police. The police, the Bristol Blood Donors Rescue Squad and America Hose, Hook & Ladder Co., No. 2, responded with boat, ropes, poles and hooks. The rescuers launched their boat from the Moose home dock and soon reached the imperiled pair as the river was free of ice to the other side of the channel.

It didn't require much effort to get McKnight and Hollander free and then they rowed their own boat into shore.

It appears that McKnight owns an airplane which made a forced landing on Burlington Island on Thursday when a cylinder went bad in the motor. The motor was removed from the plane and brought over here for repairs. The two men were returning to the plane with the repaired motor when the ice-floe proved too much for them.

"Washington had to do that, but they didn't," said a spectator standing on the Lafayette street dock.

ALLIED TROOPS UNDER MONTGOMERY TEAR TWO BREACHES IN GERMAN SALIENT

Paris—Allied troops under Field Marshal Sir Bernard L. Montgomery have torn two breaches in the northern flank of the German salient in Belgium, Nazi broadcasts admitted today.

Battlefront dispatches and official information at Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's headquarters confirmed steady advances at a painfully slow pace on both northern and southern sides of the bulge.

British armor was reported to be pushing back the extreme western tip of the salient, while in the Saar area to the south, German forces that plunged 15 miles into French territory after crossing the Rhine on barges apparently were being held, the impetus of their sudden attack halted. Heavy fighting raged throughout the Ardennes, with Allied gains of up to 1,000 yards reported in the north.

At the same time, the U. S. Seventh Army farther south beat back a series of desperate Nazi counter-attacks in which the Germans hoped to relieve the pressure against the Saar Palatinate.

Fighting its way southward toward a junction with the U. S. Third Army to cut off an estimated 50,000 Nazi troops, the First Army fought its way into Odeigne some two and one-half miles south of Grandmenil. The Americans and British encountered strong Nazi defense lines on the northern flank of the enemy bulge where the Germans had dug in for a last-ditch stand. Despite the Nazi preparations, Allied forces chalked up impressive gains.

The Americans and British, under the command of Field Marshal Bernard Montgomery, wrested territory from the Nazis along the whole of a 25 mile front, according to front reports, and smashed within two and one-half miles of the main highway from Laroche to St. Vith. The First Army made gains of almost a mile in its drive southwest of Stavelot to reach the outskirts of Urferment.

On the western front the American Seventh Army battled fiercely to hold sizeable German units which forced the Seventh back from

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

The Insurance Issue

Washington, Jan. 6. IT IS not unusual for Congress to override the President, but it is unusual, though by no means unprecedented, for Congress to override the Supreme Court. However, in the overruling of the present court's recent decision in the insurance case, which is expected from the new Congress, certain facts make the scheduled action of very great general interest and importance.

IF THIS develops, it will not be a majority of the court which will be overruled but a minority of four, who, finding themselves a majority, were able to overturn the precedents of 75 years, rendering a decision that takes from the states vital controls as well as large revenues and adversely affects the interests of some 70,000,000 citizens. The fundamental issue in this case was whether or not the court would deny the states the right to regulate and supervise the business of insurance, or whether the present national-wide system of state regulation should be struck down and Federal regulation and control substituted.

THOUGH the District Court sustained the Southeastern Underwriters Association, which a Federal jury had indicted in 1942 for conspiracy to maintain rates in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, the Supreme Court held that insurance is interstate commerce and that the Sherman Act, Federal statutes apply. A petition asking for a rehearing filed by the attorney generals of 38 states was refused. The shock of the decision was the greater because two justices—Mr. Roberts and Mr. Reed—could not sit in the case, and thus the extreme New Deal group, composed of Justice Hugo Black, the former Ku Kluxer, and Justices Douglas, Rutledge and Murphy, were in control and decided this momentous issue.

THESE are the justices who reflect the views of the advanced thinkers

WHAT OUR BOYS ARE DOING TO WIN THE WAR

A U. S. TROOP CARRIER FORCES BASE, European Theatre of Operations, Jan. 6—With the mud three feet deep in spots around their airstrip, members of this Service Group put forth the old college try in refitting an abandoned German tank to use it as a tractor. The tank, a German UZKW III chassis with a 75 mm. gun mounted on it, is now repaired and invaluable in hauling out bespawmed vehicles and aircraft. When it was first found, the tank was in shambles, stripped of all removable parts by avid souvenir hunters.

Sgt. Travis C. Towne, Lombard, Ill., and Technician Fifth Grade William F. Egan, Bristol, Pa., of the group's ordnance company, inspected the tank and declared it repairable if the removed parts could be found. The police of the nearby town went to work and uncovered several parts. The ordnance company supplied the other parts and repaired the tank.

The tank repaired, the ordnance men jumped in for a test run back to their encampment. Everything went smoothly until they turned a road bend and ran flush into a British tank column. The Tommies, momentarily surprised at seeing an enemy tank trundling down the road in back of the lines, paused long enough for several GIs to pour out of the German tank and babble a confusion of explanations. When they finally got the tank back to their camp site, they removed the armor, and then burnt off the German crosses to prevent any such mistakes recurring.

Gracious Father, teach us how to turn our failures into success; to enlarge our limitations that they might become challenging opportunities; to overcome our temptations that we might experience victory. Keep us from all complaining and self-pity. When our hearts are heavy, give us a sense of Thine abiding Presence. When our task is hard, give us the strength we need to do our best. May our efforts and our hopes be crowned with success as we put our trust in Thee and receive from Thee Thy blessing, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Color Can Captivate

Sometimes we modern mothers think our generation invented the art of baby care—particularly the science and psychology of managing our small fry. All mothers in generations passed, we frequently assume, brought up their young, single-handed, by the if-it-first-you-don't-succeed system. Doctors and the science of pediatrics we regard as a blessing of the present.

But the facts prove otherwise. For instance, here is a bit of book lore on the psychology of baby care, you'd swear came from a specialist today: "In his waking time put him in the light that he may see the stars and sky. And show him sometimes various colors, that you may accustom him to the use of his eyes."

This profound grasp of the importance of eye appeal did not come from a medical man today. It was written on a parchment scroll a thousand years ago by a famous Arabian physician. Avicenna was his name, and he practiced medicine and counseled mothers in the palace of the sultan.

A curious thing about this ancient statement is that doctors are advising the same kind of thing today. In fact one of the many reasons why doctors suggest introducing strained foods early to young babies is because of their beautiful brilliant colors.

For doctors know that eye and appetite appeal are intimately related. And they know that the really garden-fresh colors of all the prepared strained foods do have a wonderful effect on babies' early eating habits. Because they are the natural kinds of colors that always catch a baby's eye.

Strained carrots, for instance, are the tawny tone of a perfectly ripened carrot dug fresh from the soft brown earth. Strained tomatoes are the clear, vigorous red of a sun-ripe tomato hanging heavy on the vine. Strained spinach is a deep rich garden green. And so it goes.

There are no halfway measures about these colors. And there's nothing halfway in baby's reaction to them either. Introduce them one by one. Point out how pretty and bright they are. Then offer him a taste-test sip. You'll find color has a lot to do with baby's acceptance of all foods. And the clear, naturalness of the ready-to-serve strained foods will have such special appeal, he'll take to everyone with gustatory glee.

OHIO'S OLDEST BUILDING

Marjetta and the Ohio Land Company building, oldest structure in the state, link France and America and both nations' love of liberty. When the first settlers arrived on the shore of the Muskingum River from New England in 1788, they named the settlement in honor of Queen Marie Antoinette whose soldiers had fought and died gallantly to win freedom for this Nation in the Revolutionary War. A DARING ENGINEER

A man who made important contributions to American engineering supremacy died the other day in Florida—Corydon T. Purdy, inventor of the steel skyscraper.

Mr. Purdy was born at Wisconsin Rapids, Wisconsin, in 1859, and graduated at the University of Wisconsin in 1885. He worked as a city engineer for a time, but, in 1889, went to Chicago to become a specialist in steel bridge design. The next year he made history by designing the Tacoma building, the first structure to burst the height limits imposed by the use of masonry as he principal bearing material.

This building, which stood until recently, was a center of construction industry interest during the Columbian Exposition at Chicago and Mr. Purdy and his partner, Lightner Henderson, were accorded world-wide acclaim for their daring use of steel.

In 1894, Mr. Purdy went to New York to design its first steel skyscraper, the Flatiron building. The steel skyscraper solved the business district congestion problem in New York and influenced radical changes in the building codes and practices of nearly every large city.

Among the men who were responsible for the vast economic development of this country, following the depression of 1893, Mr. Purdy stood with the foremost. His life was an inspiring example of young men who, regardless of situations or circumstances, boldly strike out to make the most of their talents.

SYNOPSIS

When Drue Cable learned her former husband, Craig Brent, was the victim of a so-called accidental bullet, she persuaded her friend and fellow nurse, Sarah Keate, to answer with her the call made by Dr. Claud Chivory from a small New England town. Sarah was unaware of Drue's previous connection with the Brent family, which included Craig's father, Conrad; Alexia, the strange young woman who, at one time, had hoped to marry Craig; Nicky Senour, Alexia's twin brother; and Peter Huber, a friend of Craig. Anna Haub, maid at the Brent mansion told how Craig was found in the garden the previous night, adding, "Beevens, the butler, said it was an accident—Mr. Craig was cleaning a gun." Alexia ordered Drue to leave before Conrad Brent discovered her presence. Drue told Sarah the strange story of her romance with Craig. They married more than a year ago and Conrad Brent disapproved. Craig's work in the diplomatic service summoned him to Washington, and Drue returned to New York. Shortly after, she received a letter from Conrad (which he claimed Craig asked him to write) stating his son had resigned to enter aviation training, only to discover that Craig was ineligible. Conrad said Craig wished Drue to divorce him, but promised they could remain married until the training period was over. Drue got the divorce but never received any reply to the letters she wrote Craig. Now, she is determined not to leave until Craig regains consciousness and can talk with her. Dr. Chivory told the state trooper that the bullet he removed from Craig's shoulder was accidentally thrown away. Sarah too, is missing. He warned Sarah not to repeat anything the patient might mumble something about "yellow gloves." From the window, Sarah saw Drue disappear behind a hedge in the garden and emerge soon with something hidden beneath her cape. A few minutes later Drue entered the sick room just as Craig cried out, "But that's murder! Tell Claud. There'll be murder done." Drue attempted to question him but he lapsed into drugged sleep again. Sarah is summoned by Conrad Brent and followed by Chivory, the doctor's wife, is leaving. Sarah is telling the story.

JAPS IN CHINA

General MacArthur's campaign on Mindoro, following his smashing success on Leyte, has achieved more than the recapture of a considerable area of territory in the Philippines, and the infliction of another defeat on the Japs. It has eased the critical situation in China.

There is no other explanation for Nipponese moves in China. After Japanese troops had overrun Kwangsi Province and moved into Kweichow, there were fears that the invaders would soon be in position to knock China out of the war.

The invaders did not follow up this advantage, but withdrew into Kwangsi to escape battle with Chinese troops which had been reinforced. Had the Japs been able to hold MacArthur's forces on Leyte, making the Philippines secure, there would have been no fear of an Allied invasion of the Asiatic theater, in which the principal war against Japan is expected to be waged.

Japan is not oblivious to the fact that final blows will come from that direction. To make present positions secure is now receiving all their attention. Meanwhile, Allied forces which had been preparing to meet further Jap advances in China have been given a breathing spell, during which they will be able to perfect their plans in anticipation of the day when they will move against Tokyo from that direction.

CHAPTER TEN

My first feeling was a wave of sheer self-annihilation that I had had the enormous temerity to call him, flippantly to Drue, Papa Brent. My second was another kind of shock; for I found myself instantly, yes and seriously, on guard. Against what I didn't know, unless it was some quality of incalculability in the man who stood there on the hearth-rug watching me.

I did know then, too, that Drue Cable's position (or rather lack of position) in that household was not in any possible sense due to a mere misunderstanding between lovers that a word or two might have cleared up. It was nothing so trivial. I also thought (queerly, unexpectedly) that there was danger somewhere in that house.

Naturally, one may say that where guns go off and shoot people there must be danger, and it doesn't take a sixth sense to realize it. But it was more than that. It was something else entirely; something that had nothing to do with reason. In fact, it didn't seem to have anything to do with me; it was just an intangible thing that hovered in the very air of that room. The queer part of it, of course, was that it should be intelligible to me. I am never prescient; I have a good stomach, no nerves and little imagination.

Beevens closed the door behind him, and Conrad Brent said, "My wife tells me that the nurse who accompanied you here is a woman who was once my son's wife. I am sending her away at once. I expect you to care for my son yourself and I can make other arrangements." He paused then, and added, "Mrs. Chivory will help you if you need her."

He stood on the hearth-rug waiting for me to say, "yes, sir" (and, unless I was wrong, a little afraid I wouldn't). He was not a tall man, but he was rather muscular and thick; he had a brown face, a sharply aquiline nose and a bearded chin. His eyes were heavily lidded and rather bright in color. He was a little bald; he wore, besides the somewhat stringy beard, a short gray mustache with two sharply waxed points at either side.

Just above him on the breast of the mantel was a coat of arms, carved and painted in somber, rich colors; it was an animal, an obese and unidentifiable creature which may have been a unicorn, standing sportively on one leg on a bit of green. The coat of arms was not quartered, which was unusual and showed me how old the direct line must be. It might have showed me, too, but I didn't think of it then, the deliberate casting away of all the hundreds of intermingling and intertwinning blood streams in order to cling with absurd stubbornness and self-deception to one chosen ancestral line.

I didn't consciously think of anything however but Drue. I said, so emphatically that my voice rang out against the dark woods and books and red leather of that study, rather more loudly than I intended, "I'm afraid Miss Cable will have to stay."

"I beg your pardon," he said, although he couldn't have helped hearing me.

I made it clearer but lower in tone. "You can't send Miss Cable away. She is here as a nurse. We are both needed."

"We can get another nurse from New York by morning. Tell her to be ready to leave in half an hour."

I suppose he was not, after all, defied, so whether his arrogance was assumed or real, obviously it worked. He just didn't believe my own opposition. So I took a long breath and walked up nearer him. "Look here, I said, 'deyou want your son to die?'"

That touched him. Something flinched and moved back of his bright eyes and one hand reached out toward the tall back of a chair near him. He said, "He's not going to die," and looked at me as if daring me to deny it, but it had frightened him all the same.

"Twenty-four hours—thirty-six at the most will tell the tale. If things go well, there's not much for us to do, only routine. If things go wrong, that's different. I'd advise you to let her stay. Besides, he knows she's here." That told on him too; I saw it again in the flash, away back in his eyes.

"I thought he was unconscious. Chivory told me he would be unconscious for some time."

"He's not a Jap," said a few words and then went back to sleep.

"Said . . ." he began quickly, checked himself, and then resumed in a more deliberate way. "What did he say?"

"Sorry," I answered. "I'm a nurse. Dr. Chivory reminded me of my oath. Florence Nightingale, you know," I said gently, and watched the purple come up into his cheeks and lips. Too much purple, in fact, in his lips. I couldn't help making a mental note of it.

"Florence Nightingale blazes!" he snapped. "I'm paying you. I'm his father. What did he say?"

He glared at me and I looked back at him, murmuring, "Sorry. Is that all?" and made a motion toward the door.

"Wait a minute," he said abruptly when I touched the doorknob. There was a short pause. Somewhere a clock was ticking in a measured way. It was almost dark by then and heavy red curtains had been drawn over the windows and one or two table lamps had been lighted. A canal coal fire was burning in the hearth below the coat of arms; a lump cracked open and sputtered; blue sparks shot upward as Conrad Brent asked, "Did he say anything about the accident?" and lifted his light eyes to watch me.

Well, there he had me. In spite of the antagonism Conrad Brent had instantly roused in me, it was clearly my duty to tell someone in authority of the thing Craig had said. So I did.

"He said, well, as a matter of fact, he said this: 'But that's murder. Tell Claud.' And then he said, 'There'll be murder done.'"

I watched Conrad Brent, and he looked back at me without the slightest change of expression. That was rather odd because I ought to have been a little startled. He ought to have questioned me too; but he didn't. After a long moment he only shrugged. "Delirium. Obviously."

And Conrad Brent added, "And he did recognize the—the woman?"

I discovered a streak of sadism in my nature and said archly, "Oh, definitely!"

That affected him as the other hadn't. He didn't have a stroke, but it was touch-and-go for an instant. Then abruptly he crossed to the long, polished desk which stood in the window embrasure. He put his thumb hard upon a bell there and when Beevens opened the door, he sent for Drue.

"Tell Anna to stay with Mr. Craig," he ordered. "And bring the other nurse here."

Beevens said, "Very good, sir," and vanished.

"I've got to go back to my patient . . ."

He interrupted. "You stay here." "But . . ."

"Anna took care of him till you got here. She can do it for another five minutes."

He didn't ask me to sit down, and he didn't sit down himself. But after a moment of staring down at the desk, he turned and lifted a crystal decanter that stood with small glasses, on a silver tray. There was brandy in the decanter. When he had offered me some and I shook my head, he poured a generous amount which he drank quickly. I rather felt that he was fortifying himself against the coming interview, which bore out my curious, but thus far unsubstantiated, impression of him.

SYNOPSIS

When Drue Cable learned her former husband, Craig Brent, was the victim of a so-called accidental bullet, she persuaded her friend and fellow nurse, Sarah Keate, to answer with her the call made by Dr. Claud Chivory from a small New England town. Sarah was unaware of Drue's previous connection with the Brent family, which included Craig's father, Conrad; Alexia, the strange young woman who, at one time, had hoped to marry Craig; Nicky Senour, Alexia's twin brother; and Peter Huber, a friend of Craig. Anna Haub, maid at the Brent mansion told how Craig was found in the garden the previous night, adding, "Beevens, the butler, said it was an accident—Mr. Craig was cleaning a gun." Alexia ordered Drue to leave before Conrad Brent discovered her presence. Drue told Sarah the strange story of her romance with Craig. They married more than a year ago and Conrad Brent disapproved. Craig's work in the diplomatic service summoned him to Washington, and Drue returned to New York. Shortly after, she received a letter from Conrad (which he claimed Craig asked him to write) stating his son had resigned to enter aviation training, only to discover that Craig was ineligible. Conrad said Craig wished Drue to divorce him, but promised they could remain married until the training period was over. Drue got the divorce but never received any reply to the letters she wrote Craig. Now, she is determined not to leave until Craig regains consciousness and can talk with her. Dr. Chivory told the state trooper that the bullet he removed from Craig's shoulder was accidentally thrown away. Sarah too, is missing. He warned Sarah not to repeat anything the patient might mumble something about "yellow gloves." From the window, Sarah saw Drue disappear behind a hedge in the garden and emerge soon with something hidden beneath her cape. A few minutes later Drue entered the sick room just as Craig cried out, "But that's murder! Tell Claud. There'll be murder done." Drue attempted to question him but he lapsed into drugged sleep again. Sarah is summoned by Conrad Brent and followed by Chivory, the doctor's wife, is leaving. Sarah is telling the story.

JAPS IN CHINA

General MacArthur's campaign on Mindoro, following his smashing success on Leyte, has achieved more than the recapture of a considerable area of territory in the Philippines, and the infliction of another defeat on the Japs. It has eased the critical situation in China.

There is no other explanation for Nipponese moves in China. After Japanese troops had overrun Kwangsi Province and moved into Kweichow, there were fears that the invaders would soon be in position to knock China out of the war.

The invaders did not follow up this advantage, but withdrew into Kwangsi to escape battle with Chinese troops which had been reinforced. Had the Japs been able to hold MacArthur's forces on Leyte, making the Philippines secure, there would have been no fear of an Allied invasion of the Asiatic theater, in which the principal war against Japan is expected to be waged.

Japan is not oblivious to the fact that final blows will come from that direction. To make present positions secure is now receiving all their attention. Meanwhile, Allied forces which had been preparing to meet further Jap advances in China have been given a breathing spell, during which they will be able to perfect their plans in anticipation of the day when they will move against Tokyo from that direction.

Gracious Father, teach us how to turn our failures into success; to enlarge our limitations that they might become challenging opportunities; to overcome our temptations that we might experience victory. Keep us from all complaining and self-pity. When our hearts are heavy, give us a sense of Thine abiding Presence. When our task is hard, give us the strength we need to do our best. May our efforts and our hopes be crowned with success as we put our trust in Thee and receive from Thee Thy blessing, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Color Can Captivate

Sometimes we modern mothers think our generation invented the art of baby care—particularly the science and psychology of managing our small fry. All mothers in generations passed, we frequently assume, brought up their young, single-handed, by the 1st-of-first-you-don't-succeed system. Doctors and the science of pediatrics we regard as a blessing of the present.

But the facts prove otherwise. For instance, here is a bit of book lore on the psychology of baby care, you'd swear came from a specialist today. "In his waking time put him in the light that he may see the stars and sky. And show him sometimes various colors, that you may accustom him to the use of his eyes."

This profound grasp of the importance of eye appeal did not come from a medical man today. It was written on a parchment scroll a thousand years ago by a famous Arabian physician. Avicenna was his name, and he practiced medicine and counseled mothers in the palace of the Sultan.

A curious thing about this ancient statement is that doctors are advising the same kind of thing today. In fact one of the many reasons why doctors suggest introducing strained foods early to young babies is because of their beautiful, brilliant colors.

For doctors know that eye and appetite appeal are intimately related. And they know that the really garden-fresh colors of all the prepared strained foods do have a wonderful effect on babies' early eating habits. Because they are the natural kinds of colors that always catch a baby's eye.

Strained carrots, for instance, are the tawny tone of a perfectly ripened carrot dug fresh from the soft brown earth. Strained tomatoes are the clear, vigorous red of a sun-ripe tomato hanging heavy on the vine. Strained spinach is a deep rich garden green. And so it goes.

There are no halfway measures about these colors. And there's nothing halfway in baby's reaction to them either. Introduce them one by one. Point out how pretty and bright they are. Then offer him a taste-test sip. You'll find color has a lot to do with baby's acceptance of all foods. And the clear, naturalness of the ready-to-serve strained foods will have such special appeal, he'll take to everyone with gustatory glee.

Bonds Over America

OHIO'S OLDEST BUILDING

Marietta and the Ohio Land Company building, oldest structure in the state, link France and America and both nations' love of liberty. When the first settlers arrived on the shore of the Muskingum River from New England in 1788, they named the settlement in honor of Queen Marie Antoinette whose soldiers had fought and died gallantly to win freedom for this Nation in the Revolutionary War. The city is still small but its tradition inspires who men on all fronts to invest in War Bonds until it is assured by Victory.
